Founding memorandum — January 13, 2025

Sable Harbor Industrial Holdings, Inc. establishes Pale Sun Inc. as its wholly owned Delaware corporate nuclear-materials platform. The company begins with a small management and commercial capability. Its initial proposed operating asset is Red Wash Mining, LLC; formation does not imply that the mine has already been purchased.

The mandate joins uranium commercialization, nuclear-fuel-chain intelligence, federal and strategic-program interfaces, downstream partnerships, acquisition development and stewardship of a qualified mining operation. It does not authorize conversion, enrichment or fuel fabrication. Pale Sun may seek contractual access or invest in qualified partners through ordinary capital approval; it cannot claim capabilities because they appear in a strategy diagram.

Evan Vilander is the originator and initial platform-development lead. Mari Varela is appointed COO at formation and leads the mining/technical operating case. This division preserves the 2024 Red Wash kill-study, her project graveyard and the Deloraine Decision that separated the uranium question from Kenji Arakawa's rare-earth recovery question. Mari's Australia/Tasmania work remains hers; Evan is not inserted into an established trip or credited with her findings.

The first acquisition case must survive Mari's operating kill criteria and Martin Shaw's transaction discipline. A company charter does not approve the target, purchase price, liabilities or a technology experiment. "Pale Sun first; proving ground second" remains the condition under which other Sable Harbor capabilities enter the mine.

Why you run it — appointment decision, November 3, 2025

Daniel's reconstructed appointment note states: Vilander had done more than identify a promising dependency. He had killed his own proposals, held a commercial thread through acquisition, admitted where he lacked competence and built working relationships with the people who carried immediate consequences. The company now needed someone accountable for the whole platform rather than a permanent sponsor of an inquiry.

The decision appoints Evan Vilander, President, Pale Sun Inc. It confirms Marianne "Mari" Varela, Chief Operating Officer, Pale Sun Inc. since January 13, 2025, and Chief Executive Officer, Red Wash Mining, LLC since July 18, 2025. Mari's substantive mining authority is preserved. Cole remains Red Wash site superintendent with defined temporary stop authority. Walt Sutter remains an external source, not an employee or decision substitute.

Vilander owns platform strategy, capital submissions, customer and federal/downstream relationships, acquisitions and company-building. Mari owns operating standards, technical mine plans, asset protection, rehabilitation execution and the recommendation to stop or reject unsafe/unqualified operating changes. Martin retains transaction execution responsibility when commissioned; no title makes him mine operator. Their authority matrix records disagreements and escalation.

Staffing and governance

The 2026 establishment remains 12 Pale Sun platform FTE plus 128 Red Wash site FTE = 140, not 140 plus a newly added corporate team. Mari is one platform employee with dual officer responsibilities, not two positions. Cole occupies the existing one-person site general-management function. A title change does not add a new employee or a salary plug to the mine model.

The platform's twelve billets cover presidency; COO/mining executive; commercial leadership; contract administration; federal/downstream partnerships; controllership; accounting/treasury analysis; development engineering; resource/technical assurance; supply-chain coordination; people/records; and executive operations support. Employment and accounting allocation remain separate from personal authority. The entity source fixes the employer/perimeter; financial schedules govern expense attribution.

Pale Sun has no locked slogan. Its existing canonical raster logo is retained unchanged. No separate federal subsidiary is created. The original J2 problem is handed over with conversation/read-back so the enterprise retains independent challenge of its new operating company.
